

Phantom of the FAC

A.J. Carter and Eryk Dudka | October 1, 2020

There is a hidden gem in the Fine Arts Center (FAC) that very few students even know exists. Applied English & Communications student Allen Carter has been learning how to use the technology in the Fine Arts Center recording studio. “I was introduced to the recording studio when Mr.

Sispera asked if anyone wanted to learn how to use it,” A.J reports. A.J. has always been a performer, so this challenge was unique for him to explore. The Ceglarek Fine Arts Center was opened on April 16, 2005. When a past student decided that he wanted to use it, he realized that the studio was outdated.

With the support of FAC director Mrs. Anderson, a request was submitted to update the studio, and it got approved. That same setup is in there now. Mrs. Anderson said, “I am just glad that we have something that students are able to use and learn on their own.” Creating digital audio recordings is not something widely available in most high schools, so the fact that we have this space is quite amazing. It is not something that everyone will know about, but it is very intriguing.
